AlCool Swindle-Letter from an Absconding Banker. The Detroit Advertiser says: The Corunna banker. Wallace, who had "financial operations" with some of our brokers a few weeks ago, has been writing letters to some of his Corunna friends. It seems by the explainherited from his father.

It seems that Wallace wrote to a gentleman at Corunna, giving the numbers which would open the combination lock of his sale. When it was unlocked, it was found to contain only the covers of his books, every paper of value and all his accounts having been carried off or destroyed. The letter to the editor of the Courier, whose com-

Letter from Ex-President Pierce, to the Union Meeting in Boston. We subjoin a few extracts from it:

CONCORD, N. H., December 7, 1859.

* a to = * - - - 1 * 2 to = * - - -Twenty-five years ago, one would have asked involuntarily, upon reading a letter like that before me, "What are the dangers which threaten the Union? where are the men who do not honor and cherish that Union"-who do not "mean to maintain the Constitution of the United States, and faithfully to carry out all its requirements and obligations?" Could we not then, each for himself, have promptly answered—the in the principles and purposes which they avow, to make them the cause of even serious consideration, much less of apprehension and disquietude? How is it to-day? How is it to be to-morrow, when patriotic hearts will beat in unison in the old Cradle of Liberty, and patriotic lips will repeat the sentiments and doctrines which were enunciated more than eighty years ago, while the men of Virginia were preparing their crude but trusty weapons, not especially to protect their Be sure you get the original and patented article, own borders, which have now been ruthlessly invaded in manufactured by the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Co., violation of all law, human and divine, but to come to violation of all law, human and divine, but to come to Massachusetts and mingle their blood with that of our fathers in defence of the common cause.

This is not all .-The invasion and the overt acts of treason and murder are openly justified and applauded at large meetings of men and women in your midst. This is a sad truth, but not disheartening. It may be well that circumstances have occurred to arouse us from our lethargy, and com-

I repeat that the aspect of affairs, dark as it confessedly is, still is not disheartening, because I believe there are in New England, and throughout the Middle and Northwestern States, multitudes of conscientious and patriotic citizens, moved, as it may be at this moment, by sentiments differing widely from those which will animate you to-morrow, but who, nevertheless, would not wilfully and deliberately shake a single column which sustains the fabric of our existing institutions-multitudes who have been misled upon the question of duty Charles Frodsham's London Time-Keepers, new series, and personal obligations, and who now, when they have practical illustration, drawn in blood, of the teachings to which they have listened, and to which they may have given their assent, will pause long enough at least to take counsel of intelligent reason. You upon the soil of Massachusetts, where the first blood of the Revolution was shed, and where Washington took command of the army in one of the darkest periods in our country's history, cannot gaze listlessly upon the gathering clouds, and will not bow tamely before the coming storm. We may all have regarded with too much indifference, the swelling tide of reckless fanaticism, but we are not too late to breast it now. If honest men, who really think the Union worth preserving, will stand forth in the majesty and strength of patriotism and law, and with united purpose and becoming nation he gives that his object was not merely to "put energy, they can and will roll the tide back, to the dismoney in his purse," but to "s vindle the abolitionists," may and discomfiture of all conspirators against the in order to pay off an old score against them which he public peace and the integrity of the sacred bond which holds us a united people.

Let us act calmly and deliberately, without passion and without acrimony. Let us take no basty or narrow view of the causes which have produced the dangers we would meet, and, if possible, avert. It is not the recent invasion of Virginia which should awaken our strongest apprehension, but the teachings still vehemently persisted in, from which it sprung, with the inevitable necessity which evolves the effect from the cause.

So, again, it is to be remembered that those who bold ly approve and applaud the acts of treason and murder frontery enough to make a jackass, but suppose you do, perpetrated within the limits of Virginia, are not the what do I care? You are already slightly impressed most dangerous enemies of the Constitution and the Union.
